Better Than New

Patagonia® Surf Trunks from 1994

It's Fashion Week, when the design world turns its attention to what's new. We'd like to point out something better: what lasts. While we're proud of the quality and performance of Patagonia clothes, every new thing we make—everything anyone makes—costs nature more than we now know how to repay.

That's why Patagonia has chosen to celebrate our old stuff as well as our new. We've asked customers to send in photos and stories for our Worn

Wear™ blog, which chronicles Patagonia clothes that have lasted for years or decades and become old friends. The Patagonia Surf Trunks from 1994 you see here belong to Christo Grayling, who has worn them paddling and surfing everywhere from India to Baja to Ecuador. They're still in use, though beat up, scratched up and altered. Fabric from a beach umbrella now makes up the rear. The missing strip at the hem serves as a patch on another pair of Patagonia shorts.

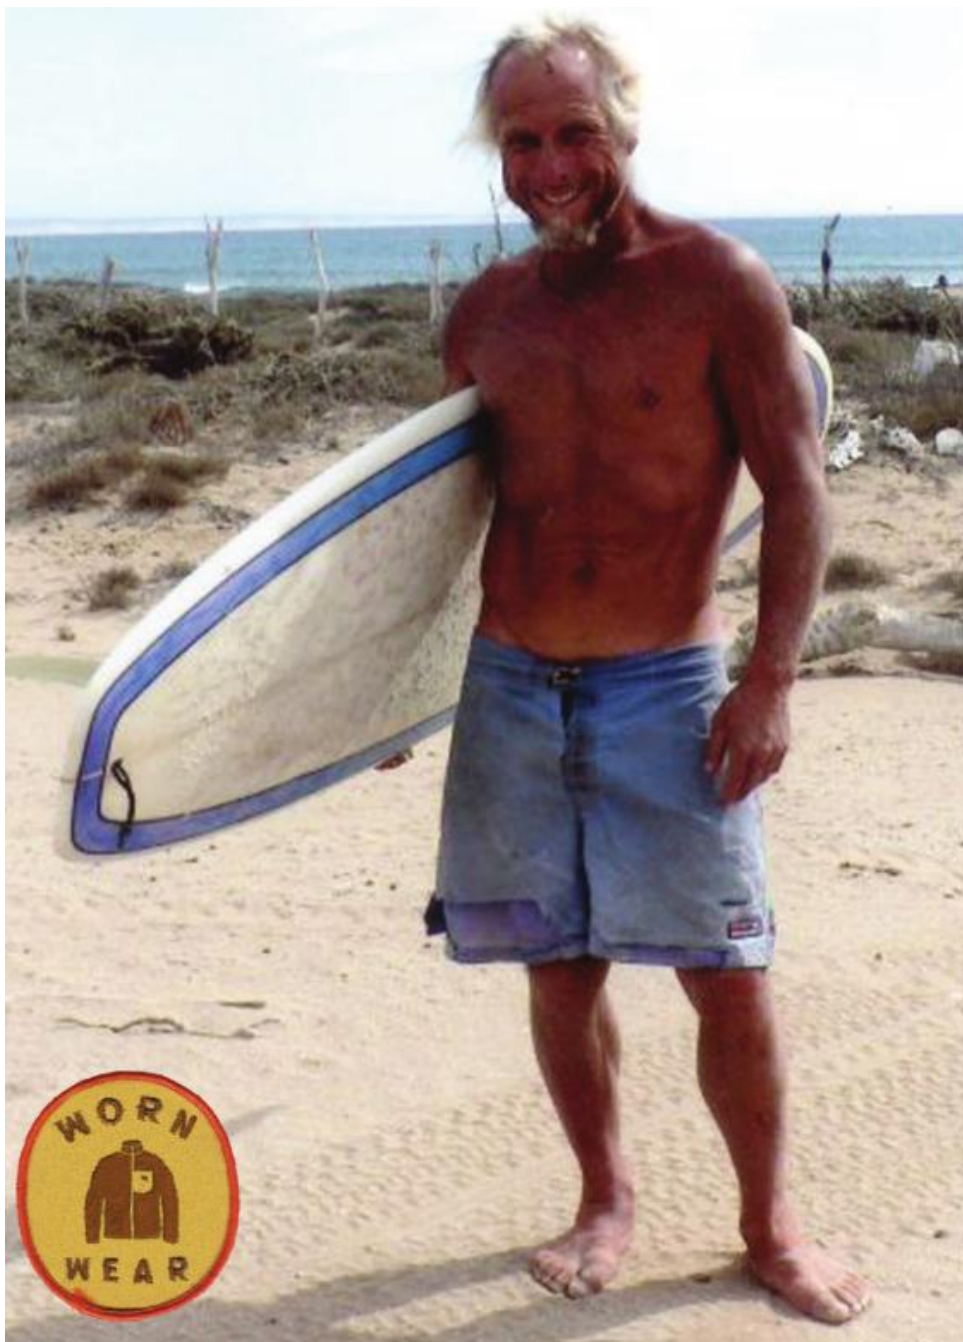

This fall we're opening Worn Wear used-clothing sections in several of our stores. Here you can find high-quality Patagonia clothes still on their way toward gaining the character to become great Worn Wear stories. It's part of our Common Threads Partnership with our customers to reduce consumption, repair what breaks, recirculate what we no longer use, recycle or repurpose what wears out, and reimagine a world where we take only what nature can replace.

Dear Patagonia,

I'm pretty sure I bought this sweater from Bob Wade at the Ute Mountaineer in Aspen. Probably 1978. It was utilitarian to say the least. Light, tough, quick dry and 'tech'. I started wearing it under a paddling jacket instead of the old wool sweaters that were the standard then. In 1979 I landed an invitation from Roger Brown to paddle in Nepal on an American Sportsman film extravaganza. The plan was that a film crew would document the 2nd ascent of Ama Dablam and then film three kayakers making the first descent of the Arun River. It was an all star cast of mountain, river and film people. The kayakers received an invitation to trek to base camp and help out on the mountain. On the day I left Kathmandu I had the dragon embroidered onto my sweater. I spent a month on the mountain and when it came down to the second summit party it was just me and Doug Robinson. We made it. Thanks again Doug. The Arun was amazing too.

The photo by Rob Lesser was taken on the 1981 first descent of the Stikine River in British Columbia. It was also an American Sportsman episode. We paddled, scouted and portaged. There is still a hole there named after me. I do not recommend going into huge holes to get your name into the guidebook.

The pile sweater survived many more years of loving abuse.

– John Wasson, Wilson, Wyoming

Rejoignez-nous. Devenez partenaire Partenariat Common Threads

J'aimerais être partenaire de l'Initiative Common Threads afin de réduire les excès de consommation et de donner une chance aux organes vitaux de la planète de surmonter la pollution, la raréfaction des ressources et les gaz à effets de serre.

Patagonia s'engage à ne concevoir que des produits utiles et durables, à réparer ce qui est endommagé et à recycler ce qui arrive à la fin de sa longue vie (ou à trouver un nouvel usage).

Je m'engage à n'acheter que ce dont j'ai besoin (et ce qui va être durable), à réparer ce qui est endommagé, à réutiliser (partager) ce dont je ne me sers plus et à recycler tout le reste.

J'aimerais recevoir la newsletter Initiative Common Threads sur les moyens de réduire notre empreinte environnementale et de vivre selon les moyens de la planète.

DON'T BUY THIS JACKET

It's Black Friday, the day in the year retail turns from red to black and starts to make real money. But Black Friday, and the culture of consumption it reflects, puts the economy of natural systems that support all life firmly in the red. We're now using the resources of one-and-a-half planets on our one and only planet.

Because Patagonia went to business for a good long time – and because we're here for our kids – we want to do the opposite of every other business today. We ask you to buy less and to reflect before you spend a dime on this jacket or anything else.

Environmental bankruptcy, as with corporate bankruptcy, can happen very slowly, then all at once. This is what we face unless we slow down, then reverse the damage. We're running short on fresh water, topsoil, fisheries, wetlands – all our planet's natural systems and resources that support business, and life, including our own.

The environmental cost of everything we make is astonishing. Consider the F2™ Jacket shown, one of our best sellers. To make it required 135 tons of water, enough to meet the daily needs (three glasses a day) of 45 people. Its journey from its origin as 65% recycled polyester to our Flores warehouse generated nearly 20 pounds of carbon dioxide, 24 times the weight of the finished product. This jacket left behind, on its way to Flores, two-thirds its weight in waste.

And this is a 65% recycled polyester jacket, knit and sewn to a high standard; it is exceptionally durable, so you won't have to replace it so often. And when it comes to the end of its useful life we'll take it back to recycle into a product of equal value. But, as is true of all the things we can make and you can buy, this jacket comes with an environmental cost higher than its price.

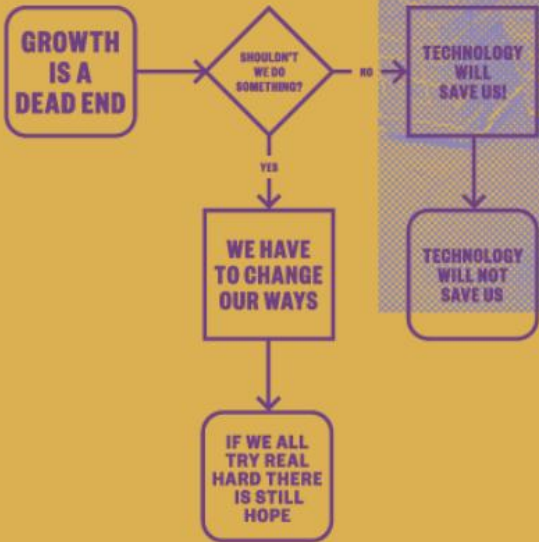

There is much to be done and plenty for us all to do. Don't buy what you don't need. Think twice before you buy anything.
